Kae Chong Orphanage visits 8th CS, learns about base life

By Master Sgt. Ronald Jones
8th Communications Squadron

The 8th Communications Squadron recently sponsored 38 children from the Kae Chong Orphanage to visit the base for a day of fun, games and a barbecue.

It was a great success for the kids and the entire squadron.

Several weeks before the visit, Maj. Young Yu, 8th CS commander, visited the same orphanage during a regularly scheduled Thursday visit through the family support center. They were looking for different opportunities to involve the entire squadron and give back to the local community.

During a recent unit climate assessment, several squadron members felt there weren't enough opportunities to get involved. Initially, the squadron leadership thought about having a "G.I. Party" at the orphanage and recruit volunteers to clean up, paint or do small repairs. However, once they actually visited the orphanage, it was immediately obvious the kids just wanted to play. The squadron decided it would be a lot more memorable for everyone if they brought the kids on base for a full day of play.

Even though the communications squadron hosted the event, they couldn't have done it without the help of the Wolf Pack. First, the legal office reviewed the plan and advised the communications squadron on liability issues. They then coordinated with the services squadron, who graciously allowed the children to bowl for free. Security forces pointed out the easiest, safest way to get the kids on base while and the logistics readiness squadron provided transportation for the kids and Korean chaperones. Mr. Chomsuk Yi, security forces pass and ID, was also helpful as a translator.

And then they played! Wolf Pack communications was out in force, and even Falcon and Falcon 2 showed up to play. Cartoons aired on the big screen TV and all the plasma TVs in the squadron lounge. There were coloring books, sidewalk chalk and board games for the small kids. Tech. Sgt. Dustin Sampson had a great story about what made this trip memorable for him. "The kids really wanted more soda. So after haggling with me and losing, they reappeared with tons of 'Life' [game] money. They slapped it down and hollared 'cola!' I got a big kick out of it."

For the older kids, there was foosball, pool (or more accurately, they were randomly rolling balls across the pool table – sort of like crud!), football and soccer.

Another batch of kids went to the bowling alley to bowl. Some of the older, more studious kids were curious about what the base library looked like, so the chaperones and guides took a detour to take a look.

They were burning a lot of energy, so Chief Master Sgt. Brian Roshitsh and Senior Master Sgt. Richard Halseth fired up the grill early and whipped up hamburgers and hot dogs while other volunteers set out the chips, juice and water. After lunch, it was time for dessert. The communications squadron booster club president Senior Airman Nicole Rakes coordinated the bakers and had several pans of brownies, peanut butter cookies, sugar cookies, chocolate and vanilla cupcakes and Rice Krispies treats.

The Rice Krispies treats confused the children at first since they'd never seen them before. One tried to pick one up, but because they're so gooey and sticking together, he put it back down and went after a brownie. To help out, Maj. Yu broke off a piece of the sticky treat and handed it to him to try. The boy's face lit up as he tried one for the very first time, and he quickly grabbed one in each hand. Seeing a good thing, the other kids scrambled for the pan, and the treats immediately disappeared.

While a couple of kids still had energy and threw a football, most of the others lapsed into a food-and-sugar induced "coma" and sat around the CS lounge and watched Tom and Jerry cartoons until the bus came back to pick them up.

Earlier in the week, Staff Sgt. Lety Diaz and Senior Airman Maggie Cervantes made up some goodie bags of crayons, pencils and small toys they handed to each kid as they got on the bus to leave. Waving goodbye to the kids was a bittersweet moment for everyone. When asked how it felt to interact with the local community, Senior Airman Aaron Drapyllo said, "It's very important especially in a foreign country because this shows the local community that we do care and we are involved with helping to make this a better place."

Wolf Pack communications put a lot of planning, volunteering and raised more than $300 in donations for all the games, food and supplies.

Senior Airman LeErica Brooks added, "I volunteered because it was an opportunity to help out children who are in need. To be there for children that do not have parents in their lives touched my heart."

Wheels for Airmen gets rolling

By Staff Sgt. Erien Clark-Chasse
8th Fighter Wing public affairs

Things got rolling Wednesday when more than 100 Wolf Pack members received new mountain style bicycles and all required safety gear for the duration of their tour at a ceremony in front of the fitness center.

“Wheels for Airmen,” an initiative set in place by the 8th Mission Support Group, is giving Wolf Pack members E-1 through E-4 an alternate means of transportation.

The quality of life initiative provided 110 Airmen with new bicycles, helmets and safety vests practically free of charge. The only associated cost is a bicycle tuneup at the end of their tour.

“I was thinking about buying a bike, but now I don’t have to,” said Airman Delano Gray, 8th Security Forces Squadron. “This was quite a nice surprise for me; I had no idea.” Airman Gray, who was the first Wolf Pack member to get a bike, received his new bike directly from the Wolf, who rode the bike to the ceremony along with other base leaders.

In order to purchase bicycles and safety equipment, wing leadership found the money in a family support center program, and according to the wing commander the program is just getting started.

“Our next goal is to provide every Airman, A1C [airman 1st class] and below the chance to get a bike for the entire year they are here,” said Col. Brian Bishop, 8th Fighter Wing commander.

According to leadership, the long-term vision is to expand the program to allow all E-6s and below to have a bicycle for the duration of their tour.

“I hope you guys enjoy the bikes,” said the Wolf during his comments at the ceremony.

Airman Justin Goodrich, Armed Forces Network, was the last Airman in today's ceremony to find out he was getting a bike. This was after he covered the story for AFN.

PRIDE OF THE PACK

Staff Sgt. Timothy Roznos Jr.

Unit: 8th Fighter Wing, 8th Operations Support Squadron

Duties: Integrated tasking order 2005 combat mission folder management

Hometown: Madison, Wis.

Follow-on: Hickam Air Force Base, Hawaii

Hobbies: Exercise and traveling

Favorite music: Blink 182 and Coldplay

Last good movie: “JSA: Joing Security Area” a Korean movie

Best thing you’ve done here: “Teaching English to elementary children and scuba-diving on Jeju Island.”

“Staff Sgt. Timothy Roznos made a vast impact throughout the wing and community from the moment of his arrival. As the Integrated Tasking Order Targets Manager, he is solely responsible for maintenance of the North Korean target database.

“Sgt. Roznos’ focus since arriving at Kunsan has been to review the ITO targets database. His efforts have identified 65 discrepancies in the Air Component Commander’s ITO target materials that would have otherwise decreased the Wolf Pack’s combat capabilities. These discrepancies highlighted critical items to the commander requiring correction for the most effective prosecution of North Korean military targets. In addition, Sgt. Roznos personally prepared 10 real world combat mission folders, covering 40 facilities ensuring Wolf Pack pilots have the most up to date target data. He has also built 60 local area maps for the 80th and 35th Fighter Squadrons, providing vital situational awareness data to pilots flying local area sorties.

“Sgt. Roznos is the embodiment of a true noncommissioned officer and continually sets the example for others to follow. He has completed 10 college credit hours since arriving at Kunsan and is on course to finish his degree by October 2005. Sergeant Roznos fosters Republic of Korea and U.S. relations by volunteering six hours of his free time every Saturday to teach English to Korean elementary school students at a local school. Sgt. Roznos is deserving of the Pride of the Pack Award.”

PRIDE OF THE PACK

Staff Sgt. Daniel L. Mayo

Unit: 8th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron Juvats

Duties: Avionics expeditor

Hometown: “My mother lives in Great Falls, Montana, and my father lives in Athens, Georgia. I claim both.”

Follow-on: Misawa Air Base, Japan

Hobbies: “I like to work on cars and spend time with my wife and daughter, but being here in Korea makes that kind of hard, so I watch a lot of football and study.”

Favorite music: “Rock and metal”

Last good movie: “Sin City”

Best thing you’ve done here: “I think the best thing I’ve done here is to just be a rock for others. Our job is pretty chaotic, and with the added stress of being in a foreign country and away from family, life can get pretty tough. Most of the time, people just need to laugh and smile, and in my own unique way I provide that.”

“I wholeheartedly recommend Staff Sgt. Daniel Mayo for the Pride of the Pack Award. Sgt. Mayo’s proactive leadership has left an indelible mark on the 80th Aircraft Maintenance Unit and the Kunsan maintenance community from the moment of his arrival to Kunsan in February 2005. During his time here, Sgt. Mayo has demonstrated uncommon dedication and a level of pride seen only in the truest craftsman. His first concern was to ensure that his people had the right training to achieve the mission. He organized a team of six supervisors and guided the process of updating existing plans and transferring over 8,000 tasks and removal of more than 75 unnecessary items. Sgt. Mayo’s next challenge was to ensure that his personnel had the tools to do the job right the first time. Finally, Sgt. Mayo continued to prove his mettle by quickly orchestrating and directing completion of a short notice fleet modification to install new hardware and software affecting five major aircraft systems integrated with the Situational Awareness Data-Link System, preparing the wing to receive initial shipment of the SNIPER Targeting Pod. His leadership enabled the upgrade of 21 aircraft ahead of schedule.”

Cultural Corner

Did you know?

Korea has a national video game academy located in Seoul. In an effort to develop highly skilled professionals for the domestic video game industry, the Ministry of Culture and Tourism opened the Korea Game Development & Promotion Institute in 2000.

The opening of the institute came as part of the Korean government’s efforts to promote the development of the local video game industry, taking advantage of its well-established information technology infrastructure. The government aims to transform the industry, one of the key strategic items for the next generation, into one of the world’s top three powerhouses along with the United States and Japan by 2007.

Courses run for eight semesters over two years with the development of a game project as the final thesis. Some of the game projects are commercialized with an aim to go on the world market.

The most distinguished characteristic of the institute is the integrated operation of the three majors, which allows all students to participate in the entire process of video game development.

REACHING FOR A WIN

First baseman Jeff Hearon from the 8th Maintenance Squadron’s Ammo team looks to make the play at the bag off a base hit by the Red Devils of the 8th Civil Engineer Squadron during the base’s intramural softball championship Wednesday evening. With the score tied at the bottom of the seventh, Matt “Rhino” Reinhardt crushed the ball over the right field fence to give the Red Devils the go-ahead run to take the championship in a 14-13 nail biter. For details on this year’s championship, look in the Oct. 14 issue of the Wolf Pack Warrior.

INTRAMURAL SOFTBALL

Ammo blasts past 8th MOS

Christopher “Moose” Bast crushed a grand slam homerun in the second inning to put the 8th Maintenance Squadron’s Ammo squad in the lead as they sped on to beat the 8th Maintenance Operations Squadron 14-11 Monday evening.

Ammo relied on its big guns to bat through the line up in the second inning to end the inning with nine runs then turned up the heat on defensive to stay ahead. The MOS sparked its bats late in the game by scoring eight runs in the sixth to give Ammo a run for its money.

“As defending base champs, we have had a few hiccups this season to say the least,” according to Ammo assistant coach James Whitacre. “Our division competition was tough...[but] I feel we are up for the challenge and have the talent to succeed in that task.”

Clint “Wilky” Wilkerson and Jeffery Hearon led Ammo at the plate while maintaining their .750 batting averages.

Monday’s win allowed Ammo to knock the National Division’s last team out of the post-season bracket.

Med Dawgs chew up Fab Flight

Leonard “Tri” Myers went three for three at the plate, picking up five RBIs off a pair of homeruns to lead the 8th Medical Group Dawgs as they went on to bury the 8th Maintenance Squadron’s Fab Flight 9-5 Monday.

Living up to their namesake, the Med Dawgs remain the true post-season underdogs, clinching the last playoff berth in the final days of the regular season by posting wins in their final four games. The team focused attention on avoiding costly errors in the field while holding down the Fab Flight’s scoring potential.

“I am proud of this team; nobody expected us to even be in the playoffs,” Myers said.

Other Med Dawgs making the big plays happen at the plate and in the field included Billy “Dead Eye” Cole, Keith “Talyormade” Taylor and Jeff “Sith Lord” Bechman.”

“They [Fab Flight] have some good hitters with the potential to run the score up, but it just didn’t happen that night,” Myers said. “We were up the whole game, and our defense came through to hold them back.”

INTRAMURAL FOOTBALL

Loggies hang up Comm

Looking to turn some heads in the intramural ranks, the 8th Logistics Readiness Squadron Loggies capitalized on turnovers and critical stops against the 8th Communications Squadron in their 12-7 victory Monday at the base football field.

“We came out with a chip on our shoulder; we came into last night’s game on a losing streak that we wanted to change,” said Loggies coach Aaron Sochor. “Our team has the talent out there to compete with anyone.”

Solid plays on offense and defense proved critical to the Loggies’ win, Sochor said. Comm’s offense pushed the Loggies’ defense closer to the line but then struggled to make the big plays and connect deep.

“We struggled early in the season gelling together; now everything is starting to click. Defense is holding opponents out of the end zone; offense is moving the ball and scoring,” Sochor added.

EVERCLEAR ROCKS WOLF PACK

By 1st Lt. Brooke Brander
8th Fighter Wing public affairs

The five-member band, with lead singer Art Alexakis, performed an array of songs from their last five albums for about two hours.

An estimated 800 Wolf Pack members showed for the event and spent their time with Everclear engrossed in the band's us-against-them lyrics and rock beats with the crowd nearest the stage jumping in sync with band.

Kunsan was one of many stops for the band in the Pacific theater, with the tour starting in Japan before coming to South Korea. After leaving the peninsula, the band headed for Guam and then to Hawaii to finish out their military tour, said 1st Lt. Wallace Collins, 8th Services Squadron.

The purpose for Everclear's recent tour through the Pacific was to perform for the troops stationed here, said Alexakis.

"I'm not a solider, I don't fire a gun. I play a guitar; that's what I do," he said. "And I feel like we're all Americans doing what we can to keep the idea of America alive."

The Sunday performance opened with about four hard-hitting, high-energy songs to get the crowd energized, including one of Everclear's more recent songs Volvo Driving Soccer Mom from their Slow Motion Daydream album.

At about mid-point of the show, the band left the stage except for Alexakis, who pulled out an acoustic guitar and played a handful of songs, solo, for the crowd.

In between solo songs, Alexakis told the audience stories about his life, past and present, talking about his 13-year old daughter who was touring with him and his mother and her third and current battle with cancer.

For his final acoustic song, Alexakis dedicated Van Morrison's Brown Eyed Girl to all the Wolf Pack members' brown-eyed girls back home and to his own brown-eyed girl, his mother.

At the end of the night, Kunsan was treated to two encores. The first encore ended with the song I Will Buy You a New Life from the group's 1997 album, So Much for the Afterglow.

To introduce the song, Alexakis told the story of how the song came about after an evening eating McDonalds with his daughter in their car as the two pieced together the home they would like to live in from the examples they had through their car windshield.

The second encore and final song of the night was Santa Monica from Everclear's 1995 album Sparkle and Fade and was one of the songs responsible for bringing the group into the lime light in the mid-1990s.

Earlier in the evening, prior to the concert,

Alexakis discussed Everclear's desire to perform for the troops in desert next.

"I've always been very pro-troop because these are our people," said Alexakis. "You guys are our 'kids' out here. Thank you [for what you do]. I appreciate it, we all do; that's why we're here."
